

My Role Model

By Elena Michalarogianni

The person I really admire is the British scientist Stephen Hawking. He has a beautiful mind and he has proved loads of theories, like "The Theory of Everything". However, the main reason I really admire him is that when he was at university he learnt about his disease that caused his disability. Even though doctors told him that he had only two years of life, he never gave up. He made a family, he became famous and he is still alive. Some people say that he has a very weird character, but I believe that he's had a lot of problems and he's managed to fight them. That is why I believe that he is a very good role model for young people.
