

AN INCREDIBLE FEAT

Paralympic 'Armless Archer' Matt Stutzman

Matt Stutzman was born without arms and because of this he learned to use a bow and arrow expertly using his feet and shoulders. Now he has broken a record even though he is not an able-bodied person.

- In 2012, Matt Stutzman was a member of the U.S.A Paralympic Archery team and he went on to win a silver medal. He bettered the distance of 200m that was achieved by Peter Terry, Australia, back in 2005.

WHAT'S MORE!

Before he broke the record, he said: "I have a lot of dreams. One of my dreams is to break the world record, and that dream will come true today."

He continued: "I see myself as just an able-bodied person ... I decided that since my arms weren't going to grow back, I was just going to go forward with everything and not let anything get in my way or stop me from my goals."
