

I took up forensics last year and even though I am a little inexperienced, I've taken part in loads of competitions. Forensics is an excellent way to improve your English skills and your public speaking.

The first time, I participated in a debate, was at the Moraitis School tournament, in January. My partner and I were both very scared and our first debate score gave us the last place. I still remember our disappointment! However, in the next round we won the second place among four teams. That was something that gave us hope and courage to continue!

After plenty of participations, I managed to understand the real magic of Forensics. I found out the power of using words and arguments in order to persuade someone that your case is right. I think, that Forensics can offer you amazing experiences for the rest of your years as a student. My personal favorite event of Forensics is Group Discussion because I love talking with different people about some topics, finding solutions together and listening to lots of different opinions. I would like to take place in every event of Forensics, in the future. I'm very grateful for the things Forensics taught me. Now I know that taking Forensics was the best decision I could make!
