

In 2017, I had my first experience at Forensics. It was quite nerve-racking, at first, to speak English in front of people you don't really know. One more difficulty I faced was, of course that I had never debated before! I had started Forensics because I wanted to improve my speaking skills, but after a few times debating on interesting, current -affairs motions, I found out that I hadn't only improved my skills in speaking English but I had also learnt how to advocate my opinion and transmit that to the audience. Moreover, Forensics helped me face one of my greatest fears, read a book in front of an audience. In March 2017, I had the chance to participate in the Oral Interpretation of Literature event in PFAT in Thessaloniki. While I was sitting on that stool and was reading my piece I felt strong! I had done it! It hadn't been easy, but I found out that nothing is impossible, when you work hard and you have a high self-esteem.
