

Well, childhood is great. I mean, you play all day, you don't have money problems and you only have to worry about school. At least, school isn't as bad as it seems. During the breaks you play with your friends and in our school you can do lots of creative things, like join the English Theatre Society. What's more, some lessons like STEM or physics are really interesting! So, in my opinion, it's great being a child but I think that if you stay like this forever, soon you'll get bored playing all day and never grow up. I also think that growing up has its advantages: you're independent, you can earn money yourself and you can have your own family. So finally, I believe that I want to grow up, and not be a child forever.
