

All about aardvarks

By Sevastianos
Kaloudis

A dark-colored antelope, possibly a reedbuck or similar, is shown peering out from a hole in the ground. The animal's head and large, upright ears are visible above the rim of the hole. The surrounding environment consists of reddish-brown soil and sparse, dry grass. The text "They eat ants and termites." is overlaid in red on the image.

They eat ants and termites.

- The word “aardvark” means earth-pig in a native African language, and these animals do look a little bit like pigs. They have long snouts and rounded bodies.
- At night, they come out to dine on their favourite food, termites. Aardvarks use their sharp claws and shovel-like paws to dig through termite hills. Then, their long, skinny tongues lap up millions of termites.

Goodbye!

